Alexandria, VA, February 13, 2007 – Imagenomic announced today that their plug-in product portfolio, which includes NoiseWare Standard and Pro plug-ins, and their newest products, Portraiture and RealGrain, have been updated to support the latest software applications, hardware platforms and O/S releases from Adobe, Apple and Microsoft, respectively. The current Mac OSX and PC Windows versions of Imagenomic's award-winning plug-in software tools now include support for native Intel Mac systems, as well as the new Vista operating system. Imagenomic's plug-in versions of these titles also extend their trademark speed, superior picture quality and ease-of-use functionality into Photoshop's ongoing Creative Suite 3 public beta program, and the commercial release currently scheduled for this Spring.

David McDonell, Imagenomic's CEO, commented, "Today's announcement marks our ongoing commitment to provide the digital photography community with the best tools available in a highly dynamic environment. We have been closely involved in the development programs of these three imaging industry leaders, and are responding to the many requests from our user community to maintain a parallel leadership position in the plug-in software space." McDonell continued, "We are pleased that Imagenomic's first major product upgrade for 2007 reflects our focus on workflow related solutions in conjunction with strategic, third party partners, and we look forward to publicly sharing compelling new product enhancements and developments in the months to come."
